- Quick Editorial: corn continued to rally into the early morning hours after a surprise three-point condition ratings cut yesterday afternoon, but the most-traded December contract couldn't match yesterday's contract highs and is being weighed down by wheat/crude/commodities this morning. CZ6 has picked up almost a full dollar since June 30 and almost 70 cents just since the August S&D, with funds estimated to have more than doubled their moderate net long since the latter date. It remains to be seen how much more production risk premium the bulls can add above the $5/bushel mark...
- Black Sea market sources are reporting that Russia is "considering" dropping grain export duties due to disruption from Ukrainian attacks; the wheat export duty is currently at its highest level since June 2025.
- Ukraine's agriculture ministry reported the country's 2026 wheat harvest as "almost complete", 97% done at 24.6 MMT; total grain harvesting stands at 58% done at 31.7 MMT.
- National corn condition ratings fell by three more points this week to 57% good/excellent, down from 71% last year and the 61% five-year average; soybean ratings lost a point as well to 60% g/ex, down from 69% LY and the 62% 5YA. Progress ratings for both remained at or ahead of comparable metrics with corn doughing at 86%, denting at 45%, and maturity at 6%; soybean pod-setting stands at 91% with 6% dropping leaves. Spring wheat ratings fell a point as well to 51% g/ex, still above 49% on this date last year, with harvest up from 41% to 62% this week, ahead of 51% LY and the 52% 5YA.

WEATHER UPDATE

- Rains were scattered in the WCB over the past 24 hours and remain light this morning, moving from the SW to southern belt today and tomorrow before a drier late-week stretch. Starting this weekend, rain chances will pick up for the center of the country, chiefly moving in to the northern and northwestern belt into the 6-10 and 11-15 day time frames. Temperatures remain safely above-normal up through the first week of September.
- Argentina was dry yesterday and rains will hold mostly north and northeast over the next ten days, leaving some wheat dryness concerns center-south.
- Brazil was dry over the past 24 hours as well, with action holding far south-east through the weekend before moving into the center-south for the 6-10 day period, aiding wheat moisture but slowing safrinha harvest somewhat.

FUNDAMENTAL UPDATE

U.S. corn ratings were expected to lose another point this week but instead fell by 3%, to 57% good/excellent; that's still better than the 2022 and 2023 crops on this date, but behind every other year dating back to 2014. Iowa remained the best-rated major producer at 78% g/ex once again this week while most of the rest of the Midwest fell; Indiana was the only riser at +1% WoW. IA, MN, and MO remain the only three states ahead of their 5YA figures.
