WEATHER UPDATE

- The Plains and Midwest were mostly dry over the past 24 hours and remain so today and tomorrow, before light rains move into the northern Plains and belt through the weekend and into early next week. That same pattern remains into the 6-10 day time frame, though 11-15 day forecasts are starting to pull those rain chances back chiefly into the western U.S., leaving most U.S. growing areas back to normal or drier. Temperatures will heat up to well above-normal for the next week to ten days, a bit cooler past that but still safely above average levels into the middle of September.
